WINGS TO FLY TAKES FLIGHT

Non-Profit Prepares Young Women to Soar in Life

DENVER -- Soaring after the success of its inaugural event, Wings to Fly, a national non-profit organization that promotes life-long self esteem in young women, is announcing the expansion of its week-long educational camp in 2008.

Founded by Renie Cavallari, chief inspiration officer, CEO and founder of Aspire, Wings to Fly hosted its 2007 camp in Breckenridge, Colo., impacting seven young women. Through interactive, inspiring activities, the girls developed a better understanding of who they are as young women in today's society.

"Our first year of camp was beyond anything we could have imagined," said Cavallari. "It is amazing to be a part of an organization that emphasizes healthy choices for young women and effects positive change."

In 2008, Wings to Fly is expanding its presence to include camps in Colorado and Arizona for young women ages 10 to 11 and 12 to 13. The 2008 camps will occur from June 15 to 22 and July 13 to 20 in Breckenridge, Colo. and an August camp will be hosted in Arizona, with the date to be announced.

Wings to Fly's intensive educational camp integrates inspiration, knowledge, research-proven resources and coaching into participants' daily activities, enabling the development of qualities that are essential for becoming the leaders of tomorrow.

The camp features mandatory parent or primary caregiver participation to enable growth to continue in each young woman's daily life.

"Follow-up telephone coaching sessions with parents and primary caregivers who have seen remarkable changes in their daughters has been so rewarding," said Kris Franklin, executive director of Wings to Fly. "For these girls, their options for the future are abundant and they now truly have wings to fly."
